France and Mexico

A threat comes from France which this nation may well heed. Carranza, the temporary act of this administration, has confiscated the property of French and British bankers. Great Britain and France have protested to our state department, which for the moment finds itself unable to do anything about it. It has taken no action with reference to the American lives that have been destroyed in Mexico, or the millions of American property that have been destroyed and confiscated. Therefore, it can do no more than to take the protests along, either to Carranza or to that foolish conference which is sitting at New London and Atlantic City. That will be the sum of our duty in the present circumstances. We cannot forcibly interfere. The Mexicans must be allowed to work out their own destiny without interference, and if the working of it out involves the confiscation of the property of aliens, Europeans as well as Americans, that is not the business of our administration according to its own present view.

The Paris Temps which is supposed to reflect government opinion intimates strongly that it is dissatisfied with our government's handling of Mexican affairs and intimates that in proper time France will deal directly with Mexico and not with the United States which under the Monroe Doctrine has become both its protector and its guarantor.

No such threats have come yet from Great Britain but we have no doubt that once the war is ended, unless the Mexican government gives satisfaction for the injuries done to British and French citizens, those nations will be in accord in the business of taking satisfaction out of Mexico's hide. There will then be some interference with the working out of Mexico's destiny.

The Temps further complains that France has too long assented to the course of the United States; that it leaned too much on the United States for protection of its citizens in Mexico and that it granted recognition to Carranza only because the United States had done so.

We have no doubt that but for the European war there would now be order in Mexico with British and French warships in every Mexican port and with British and French soldiers in the interior keeping order. There would not now be a "grease spot" left of the Monroe Doctrine and we would have raised no hand to prevent its annihilation. We would have been "too proud to fight" for a little thing like that.

Only the war intervened to save Uncle Sam from greater humiliation than he has already suffered, but the protecting war will not last forever. With a man "too proud to fight" still in the White House, France and Great Britain would not hesitate to embrace the pretext which Carranza has given them for an invasion of the western continent.

In the meantime, Mexico in fooling with the interests of French and British citizens, we believe, is properly working out its own destiny and is hastening that destiny. There will be good order and security for life and property down there as soon as Great Britain and France, freed from their present engagements, can undertake the enforcement of it.

The President's Own State.

New York, Indiana and New Jersey are regarded as "pivotal" states in presidential contests. While there is little doubt that New York will be in the Hughes column and hardly more, that Indiana will be by its side, there has, so far, been no incident in either state indicating the attitude of it toward the candidates, unless we may accept the exceedingly small progressive vote for Judge Seabury as candidate for governor of New York as evidence that the democrats have little to expect from that source.

But there has been a definite trial of President Wilson's strength in his adopted state of New Jersey and he was humiliatedly defeated in a contest within his own party. Mr. Wilson threw himself into the fight between Senator Martine and Wescott for the senatorial nomination. Every influence the president could muster was brought to bear in favor of Wescott who had placed him in nomination at both Baltimore and St. Louis. Though the president had made the political fortune of Martine, the latter, notwithstanding he has been regarded as a joke in the senate as well as in his own state, turned out to have a mind of his own and declined to be placed in leading strings by the president. He voted against some of the president's measures and joined in opposition to the confirmation of two presidential appointments. The president accordingly brought Wescott out against him. Martine went before the people of New Jersey and publicly announced that he would rather "go back to the farm" than to go to the White House every day for "orders." That became the issue of the campaign, or rather, the president was thus made the issue and Martine was nominated by a vote of two to one. He was not carried along by his own strength but by the resentment the democrats of New Jersey felt toward the president. Whether that resentment was merely against his interference in the senatorial fight or whether it was more deep-seated and rested upon a profound dissatisfaction with the administration we do not know, but that does not really matter. The manifestation of it leaves no doubt of the weakness of the president in his own state.

New Jersey, anyhow, is nominally republican. It has great industries and is favorable to protection, regarding it as the only safeguard of a satisfactory standard of wages and living. In 1910 there was a strong democratic swing all over the country and it resulted in the election of Woodrow Wilson as governor, then an unknown quantity, but believed to be a man of high ideals and fine character. But two years later, as candidate for president, Mr. Wilson carried the state by only a plurality, the combined republican and progressive vote exceeding his by 55,956. In 1914 the republicans swept the state in the election of a legislature and they elected eight out of twelve representatives, and last year they elected a large majority of the legislature.

Except in the fight last month with Mr. Martine Mr. Wilson has not tested the sentiment of the people of New Jersey with respect to himself since 1912. He is not the same Mr. Wilson he was then. His ideals may be just as high but they are different from those which attracted the voters six years and four years ago. Unless the people of New Jersey have followed Mr. Wilson in all his shifting and changing since then he cannot count upon any considerable support in November.

It is not strange that a democratic club along the border, formed for the state or local success of the democratic party should decline to call itself the Wilson club. Our democratic friends at Ajo are more far-seeing and astute politicians than we had suspected.

Old Sleuth Outleuthed.

"Old Sleuth," Sherlock Holmes and the whole bunch of detectives who have lived and acted in the land of romance have been beaten a mile in real life. An officer in the Bureau of Unidentified Dead in New York, was confronted with the problem of identifying a skeleton which had been discovered by a builder in the course of developing some farm land in the suburbs. He conceived the novel idea of filling out the features of the remains with wax, forming what he believed was the face of the man when in life. This was then photographed and shown about in the vicinity of the find. The result was surprising. No less than four persons recognized the photograph of the "built up" corpse. Arrests were made, and the police believe they have unearthed the evidence of "blackhand" activity. Perhaps the securing of features so closely resembling those of the dead man was an accident. It may be that another attempt would fail. Still, it is possible, as the Brooklyn Eagle observes, that "after all, the shape of a man's face is more distinctive than we have been accustomed to believe."

We have accepted a great deal of British war news without comment or outward evidence of pain. But when we are told of the exploit of a Canadian corporal who alone attacked and killed a party of nineteen Germans and surrounded and captured a solitary survivor, we rise in protest.

It is the opinion of John M. Parker, of Louisiana, running for vice-president on a headless ticket, that "Hughes ought to be defeated." Unfortunately for the Democratic ticket, the opinion does not weigh as heavily with the voters as it does with himself.

"Let the people go hungry," said an arrogant labor agitator in New York, who thought that it was going to be possible to tie up all business there at the command of a few hothouses. Does this sort of thing have the sanction of President Wilson, too?

Business in New York has not been paralyzed. Labor unions there have not been driven out of existence. Mr. Gompers, who predicted that one of these things would surely happen, is a poor prophet.

King Constantine is now slowly making up his mind that he loves his throne more than he loves his brother-in-law.

LEAP YEAR AND PRESIDENTIAL ELECTIONS

The fourth year brings round that civic turmoil, peculiar to our republic, which involves the choice of our chief magistrate. By what magic this is incident with the privilege which equals woman with man in one of the most dramatic prerogatives of life we should be very far from trying to say, though probably we could say if we tried hard enough. We are richly content with the phenomenon itself, and have no ambition to explore the reasons why the year of our presidential election should always be coincident with leap-year. It is a pleasing conjecture that the Fathers of the Republic may have wished to pay a graceful duty to the Mothers in choosing for the quadrennial election of our president that year out of the four when each or any woman may demand the man of her preference in marriage. But the conjecture may be too fond; the Fathers may have had no such notion; they may not have thought of it; or, if they did, they may have recognized the coincidence in a sort of afterthought, as a joke which the Mothers would enjoy when they saw it; in that kind of domestication which is pre-eminently characteristic of our commonwealth they may have expected to laugh it over with them. In a later generation, the mystical concurrence of leap-year and the presidential year was probably lost to the political consciousness, as it has ever since remained forgotten until our conjecture had, most unexpectedly with ourselves, pierced to it, though few of our brother and sister psychologists will be willing to allow the fact.

There is a further inquiry which we will not press, but will merely offer for the general pursuit. It is quite possible that it was within the intention of the founders of the commonwealth to build it upon the wisdom of the citizen of both sexes, and not lopsidedly leave it toppling upon the uneven judgment of the male citizens. It does not seem too much to suppose that they esteemed the female citizens equally worthy of public trust, and that in the fullness of time, say after the lapse of nearly a century and a half, they meant their intention to appear. At any rate, it is remarkable that now, in the thirty-first or thirty-second presidential campaign, none of the political parties propose to fight it without the help of the female citizens, unless the anti-suffragists have a champion in the field, who will of course be a man. —W. D. Howells, in Harper's Magazine.

WAS KITCHENER A WOMAN-HATER

It has always been accepted as a fact that Lord Kitchener was a woman-hater; on that point one opinion is worth as much as another. His principal friends were undoubtedly men, but he had a real regard and friendship for a few women, and they on their part recognized and reciprocated the chivalrous attitude he adopted toward them. His profession and career were what he lived for, and they filled his life, and as his responsibilities and power increased he thought of nothing else; every other consideration was subordinated to whatever task he had undertaken. The fact that he had only bachelors on his staff gave color to the story. He did not think that a soldier on active service should be married, because no one with home ties and responsibilities could fail to have anxieties which might prevent his exclusive devotion being given to his profession; but though one of his staff disregarded the edict, and Lord Kitchener regretted it, it made no difference either to the confidence he continued to give him, or in the wholehearted service he gave to his chief.—Lady St. Heller, in Harper's Magazine, for October.

Mesa News Notes

COTTON THE ARTISAN OF THE VALLEY
Old King cotton is making valley farmers and folks in general wake up and take notice this fall. Never more in the estimation of the aristocrat under the dam rancher look upon the fleecy staple as something to be considered only in connection with forty acres and a mule in the poorer hands of the south. A sample of the way King Cotton is impressing this lesson is shown in a sale of six bales by Fred Weeks yesterday. He received a check for $1,000 for the six bales, and he left at least three and one-half tons of seed, which are worth better than $27 per ton. Like most other valley ranchers, Mr. Weeks was not so much in love with the cotton idea, and implanted some only because of a portion of idle land on his place.

In this connection, a foreman of another cotton farm, on yesterday wired the owner that he had an offer of 21 cents for 25 bales, and asked for instructions as to selling. Cotton is king, or at least co-emperor with alfalfa in the Salt River valley.

COUNCIL MEETS TONIGHT
At the Tuesday night meeting of the council the proposed purchase of the site of the new city hall was discussed at length. The council and the gas people were unable to get entirely together on the various propositions, and there will be another meeting with the members of the council and the committee present, to further thrash out the proposition.

WORK ON WELL
Work on the new city well is progressing steadily. The drillers are now down 48 feet and are making a flat bottom. The well is about 100 feet in diameter and the growing demand of the city will be badly needed.

REV. SUMMERS RETURNS
Rev. L. E. Summers, former pastor of the Methodist church, has returned from California, and is preparing his household goods for shipment to Williams, where he will preach next evening. During his four years' stay here, Mr. Summers made many lasting friends who are busy wishing him well in his new work.

NEARING COMPLETION
The Guild room situated on the rear of the lot of the Episcopal church, is nearing completion and will be ready for use by October 15. Rev. Hoy states that this room is to be for purposes of general social enjoyment, in which the church hopes that the entire community may be benefited. The first use to which it was to have been put was the Merchants and Employees' banquet on Friday night, but the building could not be completed on time.

HAVE ACCEPTED INVITATION
Hon. Dwight B. Heard and C. S. Scott, of Phoenix, have accepted the invitation of the Mesa Episcopal club and will address the meeting tonight at the town hall.

VISIT PHOENIX
A number of Mesa people drove to Phoenix last evening to see the fashion show. Among others, Miss Iva Reeves took over a load in her new Ford.

NINETEEN YEAR OLD BOY IS MISSING
Search was made yesterday for Henry White, a nineteen-year-old boy who has not been seen since leaving his home in the western part of the city at eight o'clock Tuesday evening. A brother of the missing boy disappeared the sheriff's office of his disappearance and asked that the officials aid the family in locating the boy.

Henry came here a few months ago from Oklahoma and has been visiting his relatives who do not suspect any foul play. They believe that the spirit of adventure prompted the runaway, but at the same time they are greatly concerned as to his whereabouts. He is a blond, slender, dark complexioned, with dark hair and blue eyes. He was wearing a dark suit when he left home and carried a satchel.

INFANT SANDIT
[Republican A. P. Leased Wire]
CHICAGO, Oct. 4.—Two hands of youthful automobile bandits, one of them armed with a tommy gun, were held up six saloons within an hour yesterday. Sums ranging from $10 to $25 were taken.

The boy, armed with a revolver, usually was the first of the band to burst into the saloons, "covering" the occupants while his companions robbed them.

DEDICATED TO THE ARIZONA LEGISLATURE
(With apologies to Walt Mason)

There is a land of pure delight remote from vulgar storms, where people stay up day and night inventing new reforms. The salutes have no feet or hands, they all have run to law; because their blessed hand demands no other things than law. They nothing do but legislate, and frame new laws every day and no one has to pay the freight; there is no freight to pay. There talksmen are in the van, and lawyers are in swarms, and he is held the greatest man who springs the most reforms. There no one plows, and no one sows, or weeds the tillers' traps, because they all are making laws to govern other chaps. No snoring from the breeze; reformers come along and kill such industries as these. If any fellow strains and racks his form to gain a roll, they hit him with an income tax and put him in the hole. "You have," they say, "no earthly right to money you have earned, and to the lawyers, right or wrong, it all must be returned; there's always sn where such things be, and all we need is laws." And so beneath these uplift flags they argue, rant and rail. One half the population drags, the other half to jail.

RETURNING TO MEMPHIS.

WEDDING OF MISS BOYLE AND MR. HAWORTH AT ST. MARY'S

Long before the appointed hour prominent state officials and members of the social and musical sets gathered at the church for the marriage of the favorite young soloist to the well known Prescott society was of general interest. The service, which lasted more than an hour, was most impressive and beautiful.

St. Mary's never presented a more artistic and attractive appearance. A yellow and green color scheme was used in decoration and the effect obtained by the employment of ferns, palms and chrysanthemums was particularly pleasing. Inside the chancel were many potted plants and on the High Altar chrysanthemums were arranged in dignified simplicity. The tall vases held long stemmed flowers which also topped the pews where sat the family and immediate friends. The communion rail was festooned with ferns and the pillars of the church were hung with white satin painted in dainty design by the bride's sister, known on the coast as Sister M. Coletta of the Immaculate Heart College at Hollywood.

The choir loft was embellished in palms with a touch of tulle here and there to break the regular outline. In the center of the arch, doves were suspended. The entire effect was charming and wonderful, a pretty setting for the bridal party.

The music was a delightful feature of the program being arranged by the bride, who has taken an active part in the musical events in Phoenix for the past few years. The bridal party entered the church to the strains of Lohengrin and during Mass a quartette composed of Mrs. Benedict Spaulding, Mrs. A. B. Schuler, George Allan and John Thomas, sang "O Perfect Love." This was followed by "Ave Maria, Bright and Pure," by the choir. At offertory Mrs. Spaulding rendered "Mother of Christ and the Virgin" and the choir played by Charles Snyder was arranged by Miss Regina Cadieux. During communion the choir softly sang "O Lord, I Am Not Worthy" and "Hail Patron Saint" and at the benediction, Mrs. Spaulding's solo was "The Life Road." As the young people left the church the nuptial march was played.

Miss Ellen Hughes was the maid of honor and wore a becoming frock of yellow tulle and silver lace. She wore a large hat of cloth of silver, trimmed with a bird of Paradise and carried an arm bouquet of yellow roses.

Little Miss Marion Whitney was the flower girl and in a dainty yellow gown made a pretty picture as she scattered the rose petals along the path of the bride. Miss Nancy Rhumt was a very charming train bearer and she too, was gowned in yellow, a beautiful lingerie frock ornamented with chiffon roses.

James Charles O'Malley carried the wedding ring in a chrysanthemum. The bride and groom were married by Rev. J. J. O'Malley.
